

INDIAN POLICE HUNT TRESPASSERS

(--when you were in the Indian Police.)

Indian Police?

(Yeah.)

Well, the government put me out in the field first, around the Wichita Mountains cause I lived in there. And I could be around in that whole community. They call that District 2. They put me in District 2. That includes the territory from Anadarko to Apache, and up almost to Ft. Sill. And then it goes west to the Wichita Mountains, by that Medicine Point, north of Cache, and goes through Saddle Mountain. Well, I don't go any further west than Saddle Mountain. But I could go straight north--come clear up to Carnegie. That was my territory. Clear back to Carnegie on the Washita and back to Anadarko. That's the district I had to work with. There's two of us in the district. Another man by the name of Johnson--Arthur Johnson--he was above me. He was a Wyandot.

(A Wyandot?)

Wyandot. He told me that he'd keep the north end around Chickasha and Cyril and in through there and me--to be on the south end. About through Carnegie there.

(How old were you when you signed up?)

Well, I must--I was just young yet. Not over 25. Not over 25, I don't think.

(Were you married?)

Yes, I was married. I was married. Well, we were hunting trespassers mostly and anybody among the Indians--cattlemen and farmers. The country had already opened and there were no fences.
