

them, or what became of them. It was my job to make that report. So I went all over this reservation in my district. Some of them says, "We never bought any." "Yes, you did. You bought them from a certain--", I don't know who they bought them from. I had the bill of sale and I'd check after them. "Well, they died. All them horses died." Maybe they give them away or sold them or they died. So I had to report them dead. Every one of them Indians make a report dead. So the United States Marshal go and get them. Sometimes some of them would say, "I give them to my Cheyenne friend." "What's his name." I'd get the name. "My Arapaho friend." I'd get his name. "Wichita, Caddo friend." I'd get his name. All right, we find out about close to 300 head was given to the Cheyennes and Arapaho. Government took the matter up with the Agent up there--the Cheyenne-Arapaho Agent there. They got all them horses returned to the Agency. And told these fellows that give them away to come up and get their horses and take it back home. So I told these Kiowas to come and get their horses, and that the government got their horses. Well, "I give it to my friend. I don't want it. I don't want it." "Well, the Agent said you got to take it back." "Give it to him if he wants it. I don't want it. I give it to my friend to keep. I don't want it." So the Cheyenne-Arapaho Agent got police up there--Indian police. So they drove the whole herd down here to this Agency, to our Agency. And make them take them back. (Gosh, that's really interesting.)

Lots of things happen before the reservation was opened and after. These citizens began to complain about Indian mortgaged stuff.
