

mark. And then she cross this bridge here. They call it a river. She cross that. And she keeps a-throwing like that and she points them over there and then get to here. And then she win.

Jenny: If she throw the stick and it must be three, gets red on the red side, well, they count three, put their needle in because three sticks were up on the red. One, two three, and if they come to that, what they call river, they have a mark out there. If there's just two lines there to get in that river and she make three, well, she count just two of them there and she jumps in the river and she's the loser and the other one takes the game over.

(What if you get three red and one blue?)

Jenny: If that blue comes on, it's kind of hard to get that blue to lay on, they say on the back side. The other side is something like this only round. Right here it's flat and they got it painted red and then it's easy to throw it because this is the back. But if that blue comes on and all the red lays down, then the blue-- well, that means you have to count ten times.

I'm going to make you them and I'm going to give them to you. Make you a pair of them.

(Oh, I'd love to have them.)

There was a green (speaks Kiowa). That's blue, right here. There's three blue ones and one red one.

Jenny: No, three red and one blue. (speaks Kiowa) You got it turned around.
