

this--going toward this mountain. Maybe some thought, "What's getting into them. Are they getting crazy or what?" So the one that was in the lead got his buffalo robe and covered his head. And he went right to this water--I guess you would call it a fall--he just went right in there. And this second one, he done the same thing. Cover himself and went in there. And they wondered if they were coming back out alive, these people that were watching. They watched all day long. They never see a sign of them anywhere. Well, some of them just give them up for good. They know that they went in the mountain and they didn't expect to see them again. Well, some thought, "They'll be coming back. They have a reason for doing that." And kind of towards in the evening when the sun was going pretty low, there they come. And oh, out here, they didn't see buffalo for so many years. They were just half starved. No buffalo all them years. And they were having a hard time. And maybe these two were prayerful boys. And that's why they were blessed like that--why they were both called like that. So at a certain time of the evening, there they appear. They come out the way they went in--in that water. Through that water that was running. One of them appeared first, and then the second one came. This first one, he was carrying a bowl, a big wooden bowl. They were wondering what he was bringing out and where did he get it. Everybody was just wondering. So they kept coming closer and closer from these people that they left. And when they got there--oh--I omitted something. When they got in that mountain, the one that must have been in the lead, he kept going and kept going, until they came to a place that it looked like it was daylight in there. Looked like it was as light as the sun--these days when it's real bright sunshine. It
