

(Did your mother ever dance?)

Oh, she loved to dance. And my first husband sure like to dance. But I don't. He said, "Eugenia, come--" I said, "Oh, get away! I don't want to go to hell!" He always get mad at me. I said, "I don't want go to hell! I don't want to!" He know it.

(What kind of dances did your mother go to?)

Oh, round dances like that, like they dance. Same way my girl, Maud. She don't dance. She don't.

(When would they have dances back then?)

They dance all kind of dances--war dances and snake dance and Blackfoot dance and rattle dance. I see them, but I don't study about that. I just see them and go away.

(Did they just have those dances at certain times?)

Yeah, they dance all the time. Every Saturday they dance at Indian City. We don't go. Every Friday they dance at Carnegie. We don't go. They dance around all over. When the soldier boys come, they dance. But we don't go around. It's evil.

(Well, back when you were still living at home, did they just have those dances at certain times?)

Yeah.

(When would they have one?)

They danced one dance--they call it Ghost Dance. Yeah. Everybody know. And at the Agent Office, find out that they have Ghost Dance. They catch that man and ask him, "What is Ghost Dance mean?" And that man said, "I dream about dead peoples and they dancing." That's why we call it ghost dance. They heard them ghosts. But we're--I don't never go. I don't.
