

(Do you know why it does that?)

Never heard. But they claim it does. When anybody die they burn it all in the room and then clear it out of thoughts and everything, bad luck/ Got cedar here, I burn every morning in that cup. Every morning. Keeps us well and feel good.

DO-HADI THE MEDICINE MAN

And that medicine man, how my father told me, that his tipi, when he was a boy he was a orphan.

(Now who was this?)

Do-Hadi. That's medicine man. "Big Medicine", they called him. And he was an orphan boy. And my father's mother took care of him because he's the uncle of my father, must be a half sister or something like that: So my aunt take care of him. He ain't got no place. He got some uncles close kin folks them--and them, you know, they kind of kind to him but they got a lot of childrens and I guess they just don't hardly care for him and so my grandma just my father's mother said, "I'll take care of him. Poor little boy. Got no home. He's a little boy." And keep him around home you know, they live around here. So one day he went down to the creek to play in the water and I guess he went to sleep and I guess he slept lon. while and the reason he woke up was a storm was coming and he look up and my aunt, my grandma look for him and don't know where he went. He was coming from the creek, that's when he first kind of saw that medicine that come to him. He told my father, he said, "Let's go down to the creek," when he got ten years old. I'm going to show you somethin'. I dreamed about when I was a little boy, and I went to sleep down the creek. My father didn't know about it he was young too. So they went down to the creek and the creek was running, you know with water and he said, "Here's a stone I want to show you what kind it
