

they got something--their mind troubled. This is all I can remember and what I seen at the Ghost Dance. And just like I said when I seen that Catholic priest-- (Jack repeats what he has already said about father Isadore at the Ghost Dance.)

(Did Father Isadore preach against those Indians gods?)

No, he just went through that ceremonial, that sacrifice of the mass from the beginning to the end. But he didn't preach or nothing. People were just--they were just watching him from the camp. They didn't know what he was doing. You know, Indians in those days, they superstitious. They don't go up there and tell him don't do it or things like that. They think that their spirit might kill him, might witch him there, but nothing happened to Father Isadore. Because maybe his religion had more power then theirs had.

Chas: (Speaks in Kiowa to Jack)

Jack: O.K. Ready? Now, I'm going to sing a Ghost Dance song. The words that I will say in this songs mean something about the tornado, and that the Almighty Father sent him to destroy the wickedness and all these wicked people, and it says that don't be afraid don't be afraid of that. He means that people that have trust in their god, the Great Spirit. So I know some of you know this song.

Jack then sings Ghost Dance Song.) --for me, where this Ghost Dance came from.

But I think they must copied it from the Sioux Indian--from the north because one year, our last chief we had, chief Apetone, he said he was going look for that Indian god that they been talking about in that Ghost Dance that--(jack speaks to Charlie in Kiowa) He went way up--I don't know where he went. Maybe that they worship at the Ghost Dance. He went look for that god Sioux country or maybe Crow country. He went way up--I don't know where he went. Maybe he always, say that he's going to the land of spirit where that god is and he talks to him, tell him what to do and all what's going to happen--all those things. He tells that story after he gets up. And that's where chief Apetone went. And he didn't find it, he come back and said, "I can't find that god." Never did find it.

Chas: (Speaks to Jack in Kiowa)

Jack: Part, I don't know.
