

didn't say whether it was male or female. "Oh," she said, "did Sitting Man come?" He knew that that was going to be a boy. Well, when he came out he named that boy before he got to camp. And now that name is in my family yet. My youngest grandson, I named him that, because that was my cousin--"brother" we call him in Arapaho--that my grandpa named. His name was Sitting Man but his English name was John Hedges. So he named him before he got to his tent. And he was a boy. So this last grandson of mine--that youngest boy--I named him "Sitting Man." But my brother, Henry, gave him another name. So he's got two names. The way my brother gave it to him is "One Arrow." One main arrow. That's in my honor. Because I took care of this Arapaho law case. For fifty-six years, and we won. And when this boy was born I told him, "We got a new grandson, brother." "Oh," he said. "Did Lone Arrow come?" He knew it was a boy. I said, "Yeah, he's a boy." So he's got two names--Sitting Man and One Arrow. That boy's got two names.

MORE ON CEREMONIAL LODGES

(This Water Drippers Lodge--did they have their ceremonies at regular times?)

Well, it depends on those that have arrived--the complete ceremonial degrees--to the next to the last one. This is next to the last one. But, as I said, it's extinct. No more of it. No one living.

(What do you mean by "next to the last one"?)

Well, there's another one after that. The most highest and the formal--known as "Mysterious Lodge." But that's extinct, too. That's the highest form.
