

him off guard and she just yanked that out of his hand and she whipped him to his knees. Oh, he was going to have her thrown in jail. See. But when they law got out there, well, you know--I tell you about incident that happened over here at Drumright. It was about pert near like this. There was the two men. [The same name I have now. There was Ed and Joe Kelley. And from all outward appearances when they were around other people, you know, like city officials and like that, they were good men. And they ate at our boarding house. But they were highway robbers from way back. I mean that was really their business. See? And they used--and some way or another they got on the police force at Drumright and I don't know whether they were just a volunteer or deputy or just how, but someway they did. kAnd there was a big coverup and out from our house, we lived in a little house on Pine Street. Then we had this tent in the back where some of the family slept. And anyway, we could see this little house. We could see the back of it. And a little boy come up and knocked on the door of this house and those people wen't home. And one of these Kelley guys, I don't know which one of 'em it was, was in the house. Well, of course he came out the front and he come round and he said this kid was robbing the house. Well, of course he came out the front and he come round and he said this kid was robbing the house. Well, naturally some stuff was gone from there but the kid didn't even--we finally walked up there, and he shot and killed that little boy. Well, that, you know, my older brother was about 16 years old and he and my mother, we went to town and told 'em that, you know, that little boy did not go into the house. So that ended their having anything to do with the law there. And you know, and odd thing, when we went to Texas, those guys showed up down there.
