soldier, he built this house and for this woman and all her life, she raised her children up in this house not a tent. And the people learned to respeat her and everything.

(You don't know what her name was?)

No. I can't remember I met her here, that great granddaughter right here in Norman one time. I think we were down at a laundermat or something, you know; talking about it See, I have an Indian daughter in-law. My youngest son married a girl, Juanita Southridge, in Oklahoma City. Juanita is different Indian than I am She is also part French, but she is a lot more Indian than me She shows her Indian, you know. She's really. Indian, she is a real nice person You couldn't ask foy anybody any nicer I whish I had the manners she has. She grew up in this Indian school down here in Eastern . Oklahoma -- what's that school that used to be down there? Talihasse or Talequah or somewhere down there, a girl's Indian school she doesn't know too much about the Indian people. They knocked the Indian people out of /em They made 'em be ashamed to be In ian Her parents are dead. She has a sister But anyway, I used to know a lot of Indian people. I used to get my ears peeled back for talking to strangers all time, and I have many friends in different places I've traveled all over the United States; all different nationalities Now, a lot of people I know are bitter against the Negro people have some very good friends in Oregon that were Negro peoble he was one of the officers on the state penetentiary when my husband was an officer out there Mr. Lockett and his wife and he is in the TW business now, I mean, you know, I owned a cafe there and the

Lockett and his wife would come there to eat in my
