

It's supposed to be Molly's land here to this corner, and she's been selling little bit, little bit. This one's more and a quarter. And I don't know what Helen's got (Helen Sunrise, whose house was west of Louise's.) and Josie's got one now--(Josie Star).

(Is that Helen Sunrise's house there?) (House just west of Louise)

Yeah. The other one is Josie's. I don't know how many acres they all got. Frankie Redbone bought the other place for his daughter (New house with carport west of Josie Star's). Way back there--that new house. This second one from Helen's is Josie's, but the other side way down there--that small house--that's Frankie Redbone's daughter--oldest daughter.

(But this land was originally part of Molly's land?)

Yeah, all these was Molly's. I think there was a hundred and sixty acres. But it's selling, little by little.

THE CISCO FAMILY:

(Was Railroad Cisco allotted land down here?)

No, he don't belong here. He belonged with the Tonkawas. But he don't belong here so I don't think he got no land here. But Molly's the one that got land. She's got some heired land, too. She was telling me they used to be around someplace--Cyril, on the other side, when she was young, and they moved back here.

(Do you know anything about her folks or her grandparents?)

No, I sure don't. But she always say that Apache Ben was her uncle. She tell me that, but I don't know who's her daddy or ~~mama~~ or nothing.

WIECH MAN THAT STAYED WITH CISCO FAMILY:

(I was wondering how come Molly's family was down there away from the rest of the Apaches?)

I don't know, but just what she tells me. I was visiting her the other day, and that's what she was telling me. But they used to live good over there. They got plenty. It's someplace in the blackjack timber, they said, and they got pretty--nice place. And they all got well-to-do over there-- But there's one Apache man that come over there and stayed with them. He didn't
