

They live across where I live. He married a Mexican and he died, that old man. His boy live yet. I guess you know. Joe Pakiune. His land is right there across from where I live.

(Is Big Whip the same as páki ?)

Yeah, Big Whip.

(How do you say "Big Whip" in Apache?)

Just like whip. Big whip, just like when you get somebody's-- you know, horses you know, like that.

(How do you say "whip" in Apache?)

They got another way, we have to say Íi.be.ca.sè he made something what they call "whip" you know. That old man's name is pákí.

(Is that an Apache word?)

No.. It's Mexican, I guess. I don't know. (Probably Kiowa--jj)

(Did you ever hear of anything about Big Whip's history--where he came from or anything?)

Huh-huh. I don't know him. I just know his name, you know. I don't know--

(What did he look like?)

He's tall. I bet you never see him. You--long time you know. See that, I just know his name but I see him little, he's tall you know. They can't find my birthday what--you call it in the Office. They don't know where I was born you know, and my uncle he die, and he's the only one, he knows it.

SOME OTHER APACHES

(Do you remember this Charlie, this bà'bibah, do you remember him?)

I see him. That time he come and seen him and I know him. I know a little bit.

(Where did he live?)

He die. He die long time, my uncle did.

(Did he ever get an allotment?)

He ain't got none.

(Well, when you were living at Cement, and growing up at Cement, where did Apache Ben, your uncle, where did he live?

Same place with his father.
