

Roy--I guess that's all.

(Vera?)

Oh yeah, Vera.

(What was your youngest girl's name?)

Which one? --my daughter, her name's Mildred--that died.

(I was trying to find out if your father lived here part of the time, or if he lived up at Tonkawa?)

(Roy: Oh no. Tonkawa. That's where he was living as far as I know. He come in from south--south Texas somewhere. Somewhere around San Antone, they said long time. I heard them say that, you know. Maybe from Mexico, too. I don't know. They been all over. Far as I know he's lived most of his life down around Tonkawa.)

(Well, how did he come to meet your mother, that's--)

(Roy: They have dance somewhere down the road, at Cache or somewhere--?)

Anadarko.

(Roy: Oh, Anadarko yeah. Just like they have these pow-wows, and that's how come they met, you know.)

I don't know nothing about Tonkawas --

(Well, after they got married did he move down here?)

(Roy: Yeah, you stayed with them for a while didn't you? You stayed here for a while. Then they moved up north to Tonkawa.)

(Are you the oldest? You're older than Vera and Buckley?)

(Roy: Yes, I'm the oldest.)

(When were you born?)

(Roy: 1907. Yeah, 1907.)

(Where were you born--right here?)

(Roy: Yeah, right here at Apache, down here around that school at Boone--you been down there? That's where. Somewhere along that creek there.)

(What kind of dance was it they use to have at Anadarko?)

War dance, that's all.

(War Dance. Did you use to go to those?)

War Dances, uh huh. Look on.

(Did you ever dance?)

No.
