

(Is Custer your boy?)

(Roy: No, that used to be her son-in-law. That Mildred's husband--he remarried to--he got two boys. You know that big fat boy? And another, he's going to school. He's their both daddy. He used to be married to my sister.

REMINISCENCES OF OLD DAYS

(Can you tell me anymore what the country was like before they opened it up and alloted the land?)

I don't know that, me. I don't know. I never know it.

(Did your grandparents--did you say you lived with your grandmother and grandfather at Cement?)

Huh?

(Did you live with your grandmother and grandfather?)

Yeah, we lived all of us over there. My mother everything. I raised over there. All of us.

(Was your father living there too?)

Yeah.

(End of Side A)

SIDE B

(Did you ever go to hand games?)

Hand games, yeah.

(Did your mother go too?)

No, my mother died long time, see, they don't know hand game. This just now they started hand game. Kiowa Comanche did. My mother, they don't know.

(How about your grandmother and grandfather, did they go?)

No. These hand games just now start. They don't play hand game long time ago.

(Well, did your grandfather and grandmother ever go to dances or anything like that?)

No.

(What did they do?)

They just home. My grandpa, he don't do anything. He don't know how to dance. He just stay--

(Were they living in a house or a tipi or--)
