

That's Apache--that's my uncle's name--This boy--he's got his grandpa's name.

(Roy: He give me that name you know.)

Yeah, his grandpa give it to him.

(Oh you have Apache Ben's name?)

(Roy: Yeah, he give it to me.)

He give it to Roy -- <sup>seɪz</sup> i.dèn

(Did he ever say where he was born?)

(Roy: No, I never did ask him, it might have been long time. I don't know how to keep track of it. I don't think he know where he was born either. Because they roam a whole lot, you know. Might be same place where she was born. Up around Washita or somewhere west of Ft. Cobb--by Little Washita something, I don't know.)

(Interruption)

I tell you a Rabbit Story.

STORY ABOUT RABBIT AND OTHER ANIMALS

(I'd love to hear one.)

Rabbit and skunk and, rabbit and skunk and posseum. I tell you what they do. I just know my grandma talk about it, you know. I tell you and it's funny. You know rabbit and skunk and this jack-rabbit and cottontail,--they play had games. Old timer, you know. They play hand games. They play and play, and after the skunk and posseum, they beat the rabbit, and jack rabbit--cottontail, I mean. They beat the cottontail and Jackrabbit. That's what my mother told me. They play hand game a long time. And that's why these cottontail, you know, when they kill it--No fat. They lose their fat, they said. Cotton and jack rabbit. Skunk, they live. That's why skunk sure fat, and posseum. But rabbit, they lose their fat, they say. They just got fat right there on their neck. That's all we give it to your back, they told us that. Oh, they--

(Oh, they did?)

Yeah, my grandma told me story like that. Rabbit, that jack rabbit and rabbit, they lose their fat. Possum they wins it--possum and skunk. That's why they're fat. But cottontail and
