

Well, it's something like these Holiness people, these white people, you know, that shout around, dancing. Not dance, but they sing and then they get some way and then they fall over. They get up and then they say they seen a vision or something. It's the same thing.

(Did you ever see it?)

Yeah, I was--1915 or '16 was last time they had that Ghost Dance at Carnegie.

(Oh, they did?)

Well, that last Ghost Dance they had one Indian--they call them callers--they go around the camp and calling what they going to have--what's gonna take place. Well, there's a man riding horseback, going around the camp. He said "This afternoon, about the middle of the evening," he said, "You all are going to see something over north, here!" Sign, I don't know what you call it. Well a lot of people didn't know what--they were down in the river swimming then. Somebody come back to the camp. Went out there and looked towards the north side of that camp down there. There was a tornado. Little twister just touching the ground there. Oh, that dust was blowing! That caller was telling the people, this afternoon "About the middle of the afternoon, you're going to see something!" And sure enough he already know. That's the reason I was telling white people we have prophets way back there. "That's ours," I said, "You white people are way behind us." Yeah, we had prophets. They prophecy. They seen things way-- They say "This thing's going to happen tomorrow," or something like that.

(Well, what was the dance like?)

They dance around in a circle. They had a big cross in the middle there. I think they had two crosses in there--cedar.

(Cedar?)

Those cedars. That green cedar and a cross there.
