

(Do people still come and put things in there?)

Yeah, just once in a while they come.

(Old people, or all ages?)

Sometimes young people. Some white people come around just like I telling you. This Gillette over here, (Gillette Grisword, of Ft. Sill Museum) he brought his wife over here one time and Vernon Martin from Anadarko.

(Vernon who?)

Vernon Martin, Anadarko.

(Martin, I don't know if I know him or not.)

He's Chamber of Commerce.

(Oh, I know. I met him last week.)

He's a Fair Board man over here. Information.

(I saw him at Erma's last week.)

People like them. General Scott.

(What does he want with it?)

What? Oh, he (Vernon Martin) went in there to offer a prayer. Put a little money in. And General Scott, he been in there before. He went to Cuban war. I don't know which one--I think one of them bundles--I think it's I-see-o's bundle. Over there west--

(How long have you been living here?)

I come here in 1918.

(You did? Well, when did you live down in Stecker?)

Well, I stayed here in 1918 till 1926. Then move to Stecker and I farm out there. I been farmin' all that time till '40, or '50, something. Then I moved back down here.

(Now when you lived here before, General Scott came down to see your dad?)

Yeah, somewhere along 1918 or '15. He was here. I wasn't married. I been
