

Jenny: He said (Cecil's father) one time he used to hustle for both wives, but since they get mad at each other, he said he quit. He just give them some money and let them buy what they want to--groceries and all. And he just stay out of it for them to get along. It's hard, you know, I guess, but I don't know why--and he's not the only one. Guy's father (Guy Queo-tone's father) had two wives. But then they all lived together--I don't mean in the same house. Lately his (Cecil's) mother built a house, and also the other woman. But the old man, when he got older, he lived with the other one. She was the youngest.

(When you were a child--back before 1900--what kind of things did you do?)

Cecil: You mean--?

CHILDHOOD ACTIVITIES

(What kind of games or activities?)

Cecil: When I was a child about 9 years old or 10 years old, we had a little pony. We go out and run around. All of the kids have ponies and we go out riding. Or, maybe, fishing. Go out fishing or something that way.

(Back then when you were a little child, did you father have many horses?)

Cecil: My father was noted to have lot of horses. Lot of stock--cattle and horses. He had lot of ponies. That's the reason they call him Horse-Hunter. He was a man herding lot of horses. He goes out and hunt them. And they call him Hunting Horse, because that he had lot of stock--lot of horse. And therefore it wasn't hard to get plenty of horses--we had plenty from my father. So I had a pony and saddle, and we always get our playing altogether, boys, and we'd all ride and go off, way off, mountain--swim or go fishing.

(When did you learn to ride?)

Cecil: Oh, when I was about--I was just a little fellow--somewhere along about eight years old. Just like this fellow. Young, you know. And
