

day, and W. T. Scott looked at the arithmetic work you know, said to this boy, said this looks awful much like Andrews work. And it probably was.

Ed: He just like I was. He study half the night, away along toward morning.

J. A. Tyner: He almost ruined his health didn't he, studying?

Andrews never did study.

J. A. Tyner: No, he didn't.

Grover lives down in Shawnee somewhere. Used to live up somewhere around Arrowhead. Turned out to be a preacher. Yeah, and his boy got pretty high in school work. I guess he is over at A & M now. No the kids didn't get in trouble. They run off, they run away. Lot of them run away. But their folks hardly ever brought them back. I don't remember having any trouble with them. No they didn't have too much trouble of boys running away. There was two boys went down here with me. We were living up here close to Lenepah and two of my cousins went down with me and we landed down there and went down on train, of course, to Ft. Gibson and across. We went out to school and all and things looked good, we got there late in the evening. Had supper. Went to our rooms, everybody sat down and wrote letters. I wrote a letter home, and one of the boys wrote home. One of the boys wrote home and said we got here this afternoon, I like it fine, send my clothes. That's about all he wrote to his parents. Well the next day he caught the train and heading back home and took his own letter right along with him. Two of them left me. Left me by myself.

J. A. Tyner: I remember the first time I went over there. Father took George and I went along, but I didn't know that I have to stay over there. After I got over there why I got to talking to--I don't know if it was Clark or Thompson, but anyways said going over there and talk to A. S. Wylie. He had charge of putting boys in school there you know. So I went up to A. S. Wylie's office, and told him I'd like to go to school and would like to know if I had any chance of going over there, and he said, "Well," he said, "If I let you go over there will you stay." I said I sure would. He said "O.K."
