

for a walk. We went for a walk. Went down the path towards the mountains to the south, you know, towards the railroad. There's a path down there. After we left, after we got away from school a little bit, well, he started telling me the parable of the Talents, Parable of the Talents, to make me see that if I got busy and work, why my talents would come out. You see, that's how he wanted to tell me. But I remember that just as well. He told me about the Talents. He had the funniest way of getting that out, you know. But he would make you think all right.

J. A. Tyner: You couldn't help but think if you talk with him.

Ed: He and his wife would go for a walk. I remember seeing them going for a walk down that road to the north--
