

When them - fellows - when that fellow went over there and went around and they see that he show himself this afternoon, to them soldiers, then they come, started running towards these - between the mountain. They come and they follow them - follow them. And then all these fellows went way, I guess, try to get away then. That's why he just run out. Try to get on the side with his men. Then the soldiers come in there, lot of them coming in there and they right under there, but they just road them down and shot them. Then they kill them. They kill all those that went after him, you know. Afterwards that's the way he do. He trap, he trap. That's the reason he kill - he always had. That's the way it's done. I seen it. And there's way he done. Then I hear somebody said that Geronimo don't fight. It's true, Geronimo he don't fight at night. One time he was on the way somewhere, to try to catch some cattle for his bunch when they were going on the way they saw three big wagons, covered wagons, and on the edge of there, there's a big - a big fire. So they come across there. They find out that Mexican he make friends you know, I forget what you call them bread, you know, what they call, they making bread, you know. Them Mexicans all standing around, this fire. It's cold you know. They stand together. Then one of the Indians, Geronimo's men, came in there. He knows these fellows, these Mexicans making bread. Then these bread, when it's cooked ready, why he put it away in a big pan right next to him. He never look over there, he just put it over there. Just keep on going, they make lots of bread because they so many of them. These Geronimo's men, come crawl in there and go into that bread. And they took their - whole thing and put it in there and crawl back and took their bread away. And then afterwhile, he went back to his men, and them Mexicans they making bread. He put some more, cook some more bread, he threw them in there - that pan, it sounds like its empty so he look in there, and there's nothing in there. So they got scared and they leave. These
