

Mexicans just shoot everywhere. Because they know these Indians around there somewhere. They didn't know, they didn't see, but just because the bread was all gone. So that's the way they done. And sometimes, sometimes at night they want, they want to get something to eat. They got nothing to eat. Why, they just go around at night, they rope some of these cattle, rope them and when they take them, a chunk of beef, cut it off - then turn it loose. Then they cook that meat somewhere - they cook it. Some of this meat they use it: Just tied to the saddle about 4 or 5 days. They have their - everything against him. Mexican against him and then the Americans. Then these Indian scouts, oh lot of them out there, looking for him. But nobody never gets him yet. That's the reason why he didn't like these Indian scouts. They have Indian scouts all kinds, Mexican, like these Navajo Indians, and these - some are Comanches up there, mixed with them Nayajo, for the scouts. So everything just going against him all the time. But he's just too much medicine man. That's what keeps him good all the time. He knows what's going to happen tomorrow or next day. Just look like he seen with his own eyes, some kind of things that told him. Then he says, way back - a way back when he was a little boy, Daddy he told me the story, Geronimo did. He said, when I was a boy about 18 years old, my father was a chief. But he said we out and camped. My father says, he wanted to kill some deer. We went out, we camped somewhere, and tried to hunt some deer. We stayed there two days. We didn't camp much out there among those people there. I by myself now, I'm lonesome. I ask my father, I said I want to go back, for while. Alright, he let him go. Then they down there in other camped for two days, he coming back, he coming back to his old camp, his new camp where his father and mother lived - moved. When he got back over there and the tents were all gone. There wasn't nothing but ashes. He trailed them with horse tracks - where horses - everything -
