

discriminate an awful lot against Indians in Ponca City.)

Yeah, they sure are.

(They don't try to help at all?)

No, oh Ponca City seem like just don't care for this tribe here. Indians I guess, but I know they sure don't care for the Poncas. The town that's named after this tribe.

(I've been working with Cheyenne-Arapaho up at Watonga, I heard that Watonga and Canton was bad, but it's not any worse than Ponca City as far as Indians.)

Uh-huh.

(They just--well it's kind of sad sometimes, isn't it to see it happen?)

Oh yeah, I got--and my uncle's daughter, all she does is drink wine, day after day, night after night. I think that's something--

(Haven't anything else to do?)

I pray, you know, wish and pray that they would close these liquor stores, but I guess they won't ever be--

(No, not anymore.)

Now seems like they try to bring this saloon back into--

(Trying to aren't they?)

Yeah. It'd be worse. As it is our boys are just trying to shoot one another, out here you know.

(Get drunk and fight and shoot--)

There sure be a lot of Indians dead.

(That's awful. Let me--I want to get your name and address I'd like to come back up and visit sometime if you'd like, if you don't mind?)

No, I don't mind.

(Because there's so much of the things that you know and talk about, that all these others will be gone one of these days, and young people don't seem
