

stories. Too much trouble to tell them long stories. Takes too much time.

(What kind of stories do you tell them?)

Oh, Indian legend stories and war stories like happened years ago before the country opened. Like before the opened. How people roam about. What they do--You got a picture of Devil's Lake, I see. I use to have it. I use to have a picture of Devil's Lake. And I got two or three pictures of Devil's Tower.

SAINDAY STORIES AND RULES ABOUT TELLING OF:

Evening. Evening. We tell stories in the evening--all the old generation. We got a hero--Sainday. Every Indian boy and girl knows Sainday and his life story. It's a big story. We call him Indian Uncle Sam cause he's everybodies Uncle--just like Uncle Sam. Everybodies. Everybody calls him uncle.

(What time of year is best to tell stories?)

I don't know about that, but Sainday stories are--before Sainday left this world, he left word that if you are going to talk about him and his sotries, "Don't talk about me in the day time. Always talk about me and my stories to your children in the night.

(Oh, is that right?)

Said, "It give me a headache to hear these child's stories in the day--time," he said. he said he just like this white man, Uncle Sam. He's about ten feet tall. Great big tall fellow. He just minds when you talk about them in the day time but--he was gifted with magical powers and he was gifted to tell stories, and he was
