

Things like that. When you feel welcome in a tipi and you pray, you pray with a feeling that you're just at each. And you sing the same way. Whenever you get that effect. And then you surrender to that effect and then things come out, oh, just wonderful.

GETTING PEYOTE IN TEXAS:

(Did the Tonkawas ever tell you anything, or did you ever hear them say anything about how they came to get peyote?)

No, I think Alfred had a--he told me he had a story from Cisco. Cisco told him some story about the Tonkawas, but I never did. He told me he'd like to tell me that story, but thus far I haven't got in the conversation of that story.

(When you were living up there, where did the Tonkawas get their peyote?)

Laredo and up in the southwest. I don't know where in the southwest, though, but I know they used to go down to Laredo during the war and--that's when I first-- that's when they had Model-T's. These peoples going down there in Model-T's. They had them old highways--cattle trails. And they had quite an experience in going down there and back. They know it's a hard trip and they made the best of it. By that I mean they made it as comfortable as possible. When they get down there they'll fix a place where they have meeting right there in the peyote fields. Which is very inconvenient. However they go have meeting down there, spend the night, and the next day they all start back. Oh, they made a good--just expedition out of it.

(Is this the Tonkawas?)

Yes, and then the Apaches. And then the other tribes, too. But now you go down there and buy four dollars worth and come right back and some brings some Tequila and all that. That's where we got mixed up. And some of these non-users, they're the same way. They go down there and peddle this dope or whatever it is. Therefore it's just--Actually a story will come out later like any other things like that.

It'll come out in a story and there'll be more than one story. There'll be all kinds of stories. You'll hear. If you go down, maybe you'll have a story. Like you go around with Gertie and Irene and them so much. You got a story about how they camp--how they carry on. Well, this is similar. You go down there with some
