

I don't remember him even being arrested. That fellow mighta run plumb off.

(Could have.)

Yeah, he coulda leave.

(Well, were the lighthorsemen--what was their reputation as law enforcement officers?)

Well, dey, dey, you know, you commit a crime dey'd arrest you or kill you.

You, you, dey'd arrest you.

(If you resisted arrest, then, you could be killed?)

Be killed, oh yeah.

(Did they have a reputation of being good men, good law enforcement officers?)

Yes suh, yes shh, sho did.

(Do you remember any (-)

If you wans't, de commission wouldn't keep you then, you know, get somebody you could depend on.

(Did they make changes very often?)

No suh, not too often. Ah, I remember change but one time. That after the old officers you know, got, they got so long they began to get old, so they put in young one; turn and let them go.

(Did n't you tell me that as long as you have lived here, you didn't remember but two lighthouse captains?)

Two in all.

(Captain Larney and Capt. Chilly Fish.)

Chilly Fish.

(What was Captain Larney's first name, do you remember?)

Este Larney, they called him.

(Este Larney--Este means man.)

Man.

(Do you remember any cases that were outstanding; where they might have taken a long time to track down somebody accused of a crime?)

Well, a fellow by the name of Bob Dosa (Dosa), colored man. Cose he finally