

(Do you remember any of the girls who went to Emahaka Mission who are living today?)

Let me see--I think old man Dan Brown got a daughter that went to school there. I think she's yet living. Old man Nap Wiesner, he's got a daughter that went to school there. She's living.

(Nap Warrior?)

Wiesner. He's dead, but this girl, she live out in California now. Jeannetta, her name is. She went to school there. Les see--

(How many girls went to school there, about how many?)

Oh, I guess--I guess theres something right around 100--75 anyhow.

(Do you remember Newman Jacobs?)

Oh Lawd, I--I had Newman Jacobs in my arms, can't count de times.

(Do you remember when he went to school at Mekusukey?--(Note: Should be Emahaka instead of Mekusukey.)

Yes suh. Him and h's sister.

(What sister was that?)

Ahhh--

(Would it be Sarah?)

Could be, could be. They had a big ole roan mare dat dey rode, double.

(Roan, raon mare?)

Uh huh.

(Well, now they--Newman--were there any other boys in school there besides Newman?)

I guess the time, that time, boys and girls both went there, at one t me, you know.

(Well, now, I think--oh, early before they build Mekuskey.)

Dats right. After dey finish dat mission dere, den dey send de boys up dere, kept de girls here.

(But I understand that after they finished Mekusukey, that Newman was the only boy--how maybe there asn another boy--I don't remember.)

No, no.
