

(How far back do you remember, when he was captain?)

Far back as I can remember.

(When you were 10 years old and saw the Lighthorsemen for the first time--

Yes sir.

(--he was captain then?)

He was captin , yes sir.

(And about how long would you say he served?)

Oh lawd--the last captain they had was, old Chilly Fish down here.

(Yes sir.)

He served up until then, les see--I can't remember, but how long dat was--it's been so long, til--heh---seem to me like he been a captain all his life--heh, heh, heeh--

(There were only two captains of Lighthorsemen you--)

Yes sir.)

(Chilly Fish, then, served up to the time of statehood, or until the time the Seminole Nation was dissolved?)

Yes sir, yes sir.

(Who were some of the Lighthorsemen you remember?)

Well, in, in early days, there was old Chilly Fish down here.

(yes sir.)

(And then there was a man by a name of, ah, Cosar; he was a Indian--and ah, that's way back there--now--

(That was back when you were probably 12, 15 years old?)

Yes sir, that's right. Les see could I remembe another one--Lawd, there's been such a big change.

(Mrs. McIntosh: Who you want to remember?)

The Lighthorse in early days.

(Do you remember any of them, man, besides Pompeii Davis?)

Mrs. McInthsh: How about Caesar Bow (Bowlegs) was a Lighthorseman.

No, that was early; that was further up; that was further on--I'm telling--way
