

Ray: débi.zaya.-- there's four of them -- kóti.zédesa i.dae.da'a débi.zayada'a sicece i.cide. (Ray is apparently naming all four bundles in Apache. Probable segmentation of this would be: (1) kóti.zé

(2) désa i.dae.da'a (3) débi.zaya.da'a (4) sicece i.cide --J.Jordan)

Four of them. That's what I heard. I don't know in what order they are, however there's four of them.*

FURTHER COMMENTS ON DOMEBO CALENDAR AND DOMEBO FAMILY

Alice: (going back to the subject of her calendar) Maybe you could get Guy or somebody you know to tell you what some of them are. Some of them (the drawings) got something written on them that might be true, but others--you know, some kids just--just wrote with indelible pencil (referring to childish scribbles under some of the drawings).

(Do you think James Silverhorn might know anything about it. I think his father made a calendar one time.)

Alice: He made one, but I don't think it's like this. He might know some of those things that happened in there, in that year, you know. He could tell you. But that's about all I know. James is too young. Guy might be the guy you want to see.

*(Note: According to McAllister in the article mentioned above, the Kiowa-Apache historically had four medicine bundles, but in earliest times they report having only three. These three were: (1) Rock Child; (2) Creator; and (3) Four Quartz Rocks. The Creator Bundle belonged to Capitan or Kosope. This is the bundle which now belongs to Gertie Chalépah and is known also as the Poor Owl Bundle. The Four Quartz Rock Bundle was divided long ago, and made into two bundles, bringing the number of Kiowa-Apache bundles to four. One of these bundles belonged to Apache Sam Klinekole, who was about 75 years old when McAllister worked with him in 1933. The other one belonged to Rebecca Smith. Today Apache Sam's bundle is probably the one in custody of Louise Saddleblanket. The one owned by Rebecca Smith eventually was inherited by Ray Blackbear, who placed it in the custody of W. E. Bittle. Fred Bigman has the Rock Child Bundle today.

According to McAllister, Apache Sam called his bundle Medicine Water, Kutizze (Kot.ize) which is one of the terms Ray gives in this tape. For further information, see McAllister's article and other publications on Kiowa-Apache.)
