

Yeah. And then the last time, sometimes it last to morning, there be that many.

(It last all night long.)

Yeah. There's lot of doctors there. And over here (words not clear)-- you know that right on the west there we took camp here one time and that's where I saw that. I was in there. Right there be that many doctors, you know.

(And then--what about the drum? The individual himself starts the song, starts his own songs and then the other people pick it up while he performs. What about the drum, who is beating the drum?)

Them two head men.

(Them two head men are the only two that beat the drum, so when one of the head men is performing it's just the other one that's beating the drum? In other words do the two head men dance?)

Yeah, they put them drums and put them on the side (there and get them to help on the side there. When they get through eating they sit down and then they practice that.

(So there's two on a drum at each time?)

Yeah. It's a long but--

Mrs. Osborne: This one man got his drum and this other ones got his you know.

(So there's a drum on the right side and a drum on the left?)

Yeah, right between those others there.

Mrs. Osborne: When they start out see, this right one he gives it to the one sitting by him. The drum you know.

(So there's one person beating each of those drums?)

Yeah. And when they dance, well just some people looking on, they feel good, they feel good and maybe they bring a shawl or blanket and the ones that they want, they give to 'em. Sometimes another time the--maybe the
