

So finally he came to that point, that hour of the day that he's going to go on top without nobody putting the stop to it. He just went by himself. So finally, the next morning he told his wife, "When I get on top there, maybe I'm going to holler at you. I may holler and tell you in my dream that I'm going to holler --come down right over your house and tell you to stay with it until I come down." So he went up on this mountain. After he left her there at the house, he said, "Stay with it, don't go nowhere because you ain't got no place to go. No water to drink. No food to eat. Stay with it right here at the house." Well, she stayed there for awhile alright. Then the husband he got out of his house on the north--the husband, this young man said, "Well, I guess I'll go on. Early in the morning that young man, he got out of his house, on the northeast corner of his house is a door there. He step out, kiss his wife and say, "Good bey. Maybe I see you in about a week or two from now." So he step out of the house and then went this way. Keep going west, and got to foot of the mountain. He start climbing, early in the morning start climbing. Keep going, keep going. Trying to go up this mountain the best way he can where he could get a foot hold and get this fingers hold here and there. When he was climbing up this mountain. Finally, late in the eveing, it came--well that noon came. He want to stop certain place and sit down and start eating supper. He already went quite a ways up there and he sat down and to get his bundle out and get himself water and he started but he eat so much he quit. After he sit for awhile, let his food digest, and went down, drink a little water and he start up again, got up and then start walking again. Kept walking, kept walking through the mountain just so high, like the young man that climb this mountain. Nobody to tell him to come down. Just be bravery, and then climb this mountain--so he just kept going, kept going. Then finally he come to a point where it got dark. This world got dark and he said, "Well, I guess I just sleep right here between this big crack." There's a big crack there and rocks spread inside that crack. Just got in there and sit there for awhile and the dark came and he fell off to sleep. Just got in there and sit there for awhile and the dark came and he fell off to sleep. Just got between the rock. When he was in there sleeping, a dream came to him that
