

hunt. And they hold all the hunters back. No individual could go and charge the buffalo till everybody have equal change to go. So these organizations go ahead and they stop it. Everybody comes ready to go charge and kill a buffalo. They just have to wait till the rest of them come up. So the camp keeps coming in--some of them slow, some of them... After they think everybody has come, they open the door. All right! Everybody gets in. But if somebody think he was big enough chief and he don't obey orders--just break out and charge. "I'll get mine! They don't have to run my business!" They go over there and break rank, and kill one. Then the rest of them, after he's stampeded, turned loose, and go get them. But this organization goes and picks out this man. And the leader of this organization takes him out there and takes his horse and shoots his horse and beats him up. And every men in that organization got to do his part--just beat him up. In other words, they act like the Klansmen we read about today. They have that equal part. And if he wants to fight and shoot, they shoot him. And they kill his horse, too, and break up his weapons. Just break it up and throw it away. And he don't get the carcass he kills.

Well, he could be a member, but regardless of his membership, he violated the rules, and had to be punished. (Guy didn't understand my question). We were reading in Captain Nye's stories that the original Kicking Bird that takes Fort Sill--his brother-in-law done that and he was whipped. Kicking Bird's wife was sick and had this young child and needed nourishment. And they was out of meat and her brother went out--

(End of tape. Remainder is from notes taken at the time of the interview)-- to hunt. They try to stop him. They went after him. Two men were hunting. They killed their horses, and they were both all bloodied up and they broke their weapons, and so on. Later on the organization killed a buffalo and
