

She doesn't know.

(Mrs. Johnson, after this incident--this probably one of the first things you remember as a child--do you recall anything that same year, or anything else happening as you were growing up? Now I remember yesterday you mentioned, we were talking about this and you said this old man who rode up and talked with your mother was wearing a cloth, a turban, wrapped around his head. Is that is?)

Yes.

(Did the older men usually at that time, did they usually wear turbans?)

All the older men, older ones did. They wore turbans.

(Now this was a carry-over from the days in Florida when the men wore turbans. Did they wear their hair long, braided?)

They were bobbed.

(About shoulder length?)

Yes, shoulder length. If I remember right, they used to have it cut square in front.

(In bangs?)

Uh-huh, yes. She said in those days they wore lace parts.

(That came just to the knees?)

Yes.

(Were they different colored?)

Uh-huh, all the same.

(What color?)

They wore something similar to leggings--in the army they call them putts, and the privates used to wear leggins in the old days.

(Were these wrapped around the legs to the knee?)

She said it had cord, where they laced their leggins with.

(Oh, they were leggins, rather than wrap leggins?)

Uh-huh.
