

and eat--back in those days?)

Ordinary food. Whatever they cook, they give it to us. No special food for anyone to eat in them days.

(Well, like what would you usually have for breakfast--or in the morning?)

Bread and soup or else meat, or anything.

(Was this fry bread that you'd have?)

Yes. Sometimes they would make rice gravy--that's all.

(Did they ever have bacon or anything like that?)

Yes. Something they got to cook--that's all.

(What about things like wild plums or things like that--did they ever have any fruit like that to eat?)

Oh, yes. They used to dry up grapes and plums when spring comes--when they bear. If it is a good year for them they go out and gather them and dry them.

(Back when you were a little girl--before you started to school--did you used to have two meals a day--or three meals a day--or was there any particular order?)

Not that I know of.

(Who did all the cooking?)

The mothers.

(Did your sisters ever help out or did you ever have to help?)

No.

(Where did you learn to cook yourself?)

Oh, when I went to school I learn how to cook from there. And when I got back home I cook. But my mother was already dead. She died when I was a little girl.

(You were telling me about the games you used to play and the toy tipis, and everything--what about in the winter time when it was cold--what kind of games did the children play?)

Oh, we didn't play outside when it was cold. We stay in the tipi and warm up.

(How would you spend your time?)

We were in school all the time.

SCHOOL DAYS

(When did you start to school?)

I don't remember. I told you when I was five years old.
