

He's a good men's clothier. And once he knew the Indians, he knew just what they wanted. Yeah. Up to right now.

(How about most of the other Indian men--did they buy ready-made clothes or did they have them made?)

Well, they bought ready-made--and sometimes their women got to be good at making shirts, so they start having them made.

LIST CLOTH IMPORTED AND SOLD

(At this store did they ever sell this list cloth?)

Oh, lots of it! The genuine--the best! You can't get that stuff no more.

It came from Austria-Hungary and from Bonn, Germany. It was about 16-ounce weight. Just the best. Well, it was made for the Kaiser's army's uniforms.

Red and blue. You can't get it. Oh, you can get it if you're in Germany.

Inquire around for somebody. But this other stuff we get is not--it has the color and it has the selvedge edge on there--(referring to the "rainbow" edge selvedge). That's what we want, but it's not as good as that real fine--oh, that stuff was good.

(How much did it sell for?)

It used to sell for five dollars a yard. Now you can't touch it for less than eighteen dollars a yard, and it's not as good, at that.

(What colors did you all have?)

Just blue and red. Plain blue and red. It comes in fifty-six inch wide running length.

(Have you ever seen it in any other colors besides blue and red?)

No, not in men's blankets.

(Did the Arapahoes ever make anything else out of it besides those blankets?)

Leggins. And some of them had jackets made. Originally the men wore these serapes. They see the Mexican men wear them. They wore them over their shoulders. The men wear them, but the women took them away from us.
