

would hunt and fish and help around the place. Plow if we had to plow and then hunt. And then on Sunday, why Willard said "Mrs. Duncan, I just don't feel good. I won't go to Sunday School this morning. I just sick." She said, "I am sorry, Willard, you don't need to go if you are sick." She went and fixed him some kind of root medicine. Said, "Here, Willard, take this. Maybe you will feel better." And she gave him some tea and it was worse than a dose of calomel. (Laughter) And he was there the next Sunday. We all got ready for Sunday School and she said "Willard, how you feel?" He said, "Just fine. Just fine." (Laughter.)

MOTHER IS DETERMINED TO ORGANIZE A SUNDAY SCHOOL

About Sunday School--there wasn't any Sunday School there and she told my Dad--she was a young woman and kids were small and she told my Dad, "I don't want to live here." Said, "No Sunday School, churches or anything. I want my children to grow up where there is a church and Sunday School. My dad said, "Build you a Sunday School--organize a school--build you one." He liked that country cause he was a hunter, you know. And he had fox hounds all his life, you know; on up until he died. He had good fox hounds. If his hounds wouldn't run, they sure didn't stay there. He'd take 'em out on a hunt, why if they come back he, maybe under the weather then it was all right. But if he came back second time, it was his last trip. (Laughter) He kept good ones. Anyway, he liked that country because there wasn't many people living there you know. There wasn't a house on that prairie at that time. There were all around the edges and up and down the Creek and around the timber. Just a few fellows owned that country. Anyway, said, "All right." So she and a young Indian girl, one of the Ragsdale's daughters was a smart young woman and they got out there and rode around over the country horseback. Different directions and told everybody, "We'll have Sunday School next Sunday. Come and bring your Bibles." And Sunday, they were all there at the school house and there were three Bibles in the whole
