

of a canyon like, just cut staright down. Then this bear came. She jumped. She ran and she jump and then she try to catch on the edge of that. When she come down her claws would just mark on the side of that canyon. So she kept that up and she pretty near make it to the top. She's magic, see? So her brother said, "You better do something. She's going to get to us." So this fellow, the runt, he shot up another arrow, and that hill went up that high, that much higher. And she try again, hard. She just wore herself out. She fell over dead. And then her brothers told her other sister, we got to do something because she's powerful and she got magic. She might come back to life and harm us in some way." That's what that magic boy said. "We got to do something.; So he said, "We going to go where we never come back, all of us. She never can catch them." So he shot an arrow up onto the sky, and they went up into the sky. There six, seven stars over there. Kind of in a cluster like and then one of them kind of sitting down. They turned into stars. And this bear, she never could get to them. And anyway, did you ever hear of that mountain in Montana, they call it Devil's Tower, or something. She tip that and they say it's kind of that way, and there's marks where her claws were on either side of it. They say that's where she down that.

(That story sounds like an old one.)

It just handed down through generations of Cheyenne stories. My grandma she used to tell us that, and her grandmother some while back. Just a had them down that.

It ain't written in no book. There;s lot of stories like that, they--it's not no white man made that. It's Indian story.'

(Can you think of another story like that?)

Oh, there's lot of stories. Ask her, she knows one story. When you go out, you can see them stars up there. They say it that six brothers and one sister. No fiction. Gensine Indians story. No fiction about it. So we the first people who go out into the moon. Before the white man ever went into outerspace. Still up there.

(Gladys Mann--Cheyenne)) How come this Tipi Pole Club named after this river, named after this river, Tipi Pole River. They had a camp back in there camping right there. And I don't know something happened. They died. The whole camp. Typhoid
