

the ones that actually run the tribe. There're called (Indian word). They're the, probably be the intellectuals, I thought, maybe, you know, just classes today, these reall, educated people. Unin-- of all the different things. They have those people who understand all those, that class of people. Then they have their tribal organization. They come along, these chiefs, they were that way, and then these men, through their families, clans, family ties and everything, they went along in charge of everything. Eventually, some of them became these people. Actually they were the (unin). They seek their advice. So, it seems that this man, this (unin), he was then it's just the chiefs, the chief-blood people that do that, you know. They had these chiefs and a lot of times they were all chiefs and they was in groups then they would pick one to be the head chief. That's the way they went....they picked this head chief and he was head of all these other chiefs. That's what they went by, and that's where leaders came from, they could depend on their leaders. And after they did that, that's the way they was carrying on. Well, then, this man, he was, he came from our family, and some way he was, oh I don't know how he come to be that way, but he was kinda ahead of his time, always thinking about.....like that fellow, he was Italian, I think. He drew a lot of things, he' forcast a lot of things, I forget his name. It's way back there, he's that way too. He'd talk about airplanes and different things he'd tell about, like this Italian. He was a artist or something like that. He used to tell things. I heard about him one time, kinda made me think about this old man. Then this old man, that's what he was, he learned those things, some way through--some power. Well, he got so far he could tell, foretell the immediate future. Just like in those days they have to depend on the scouts, you know, like that for protection too, cause these other tribes was around--it just like that. He used to tell if some danger comes around if just the tribes come around, or things
