

Yes, she made it up. (Kate speaks Cheyenne) She said, "I gave him a different name when he first came back from the army," and then she said, "This time when I made this feast for him, I give him that." (Kate speaks Cheyenne) She said, "Each time I give horses."

(Kate speaks Cheyenne) She said, "The first time I give a horse for him was when he came back from the Army, and this time when I made feast for him to join this clan, I give another horse."

(What was the name she gave him when he first came back?)

Kate: (speaks Cheyenne)

Birdie: She said when he was in this second war--(Cheyenne)

Germans, you mean the Koreans? (Conversation in Cheyenne concerning which war) She said this he was in, this Second War, fighting Koreans. She said he was in the reconnaissance. She said they used to crawl all the time, and when they put their heads up to look for the enemy, that they didn't know if there was something on the side of them. She said this one hit them. Must have been a sniper. That's when he got wounded in the back. And she said that Pawnee boy that he was with got killed.

(What was the name she gave him when he first came back from the service?)

(Cheyenne conversation) She said, "I named him that, but his first name was supposed to have been a different name, but I changed it to this one," she said. "Chief-Coming-Up."

(Did she say what his first name was supposed to have been?)

You can't hardly pronounce it. It's got no translation in English. See, that's mostly named after his grandpa.

(Does she think that this Frank might have another one of these dances any time soon?)
