

for just everyday dancing. From right to left--they dance that way (clockwise). And if it's going to be a Victory Dance, you come this other way--backwards (counterclockwise). Lots of them can't dance that way. They just know how to dance one way. But this backwards is hard. And way back there, they didn't stop singing these Victory Dances until some warrior would step in. And he'd dance the opposite--the way these women are dancing--he was the only one that had that right to dance in the opposite direction. Or if there's two that have got that honor, then them two dance backwards. Then he'll stop the dance. Or he'll go by the drum and count coup--what he done in Viet Nam--how maybe he walked up to these Vietnamese soldiers and he throws this explosive of some kind and kill all of them. And maybe he saw another one climbing up a tree and he shot him down. Well, he'll tell his bravery like that. And after they leave, if he finds his best friend missing, he says, "Well, we can't leave my friend--I'm going to go back and look for him." These boys try to stop him and he says, "No. I think this much of my friend." He'll go back. He'll find his friend, dead or alive or wounded. He'll bring him back--
