

(Did you ever hear anything about a man called Old Man Chibota?)

Chibato?

(Who was he?)

He was a Mescalero Apache.

(Did he live around here?)

No, he was born out west. Mescalero or somewhere out there.

(Do you know how he came to get here?)

They just came over here. Way back in years before the country was opened, and before the government gave the Indians allotments. They came before that and they were allotted with the Comanches. Two, two--I think they were cousins. Him and another man and this other man's wife. When he got here, he got married to a Comanche woman, that old man.

(There was, I think, somebody named Dinerok Boy that was with him, have you ever heard that name?)

Binero?

(Was that his name?)

Yeah.

That was his brother, isn't it? ((asking her brother)) Binero was his brother. He was a Mescalero Indian too. Both of them, him and his wife. And they came here way back in years with this Chibato and that's how come they were allotted. Government gave them land, there. This Chibato got a son living back there west of Cache.

David. Like you. David Chibato.

(Did you ever know Post Oak Jim?)

Yeah.

(Who was he exactly?)

Oh, there's a lot of people claims him but he was just by himself. He was married but he never did have no children. Way back in years, he never did have no kids.
