

(Another thing you said, you've got some summer cedar? Well, what is summer cedar? What do you mean by that?)

GUY CURES A MEXICAN OF A TWISTED FACE:

Well, it's supposed to be a secret (unintelligible) and somebody want to be practicing it. I don't practice it and I don't use it. They think I still use it, I practice it, but I don't. I tried it one--I just tried it one more time on a friend--a Mexican. He used to work in the hospital where people die. And one night he come up there and his face was all twisted--just awful. And I felt sorry for him. "Friend," I said, "I'm gonna fix you up." And I help him up and he got all right. He was all right. And he thank me. He used to work in the hospital. He quit. He tired--and he's probably living in ~~Lda~~ Lawton now--he might be--I haven't seen him for 20 or 30 years many, many years, now--25 or 30 years I haven't seen him.

(What was his name?)

I done forgot--it was a long time ago. All them people that used to work there 30 years ago know him. And they know how he was fixed up, too all twisted, and afterwards he got all right, but I told him to tell nobody. Well--let's finish that story we're getting off again--

(Well, all right, but I've got a couple more questions. That fellow, you said he was a Mexican?)

Yeah. Originally Mexican. This one that works at the hospital over there and got that way. I felt sorry for him. Tried the fan on him, and it work and he got all right.

(Had he lived with the Indians?)

No, he live in town. He's married to a Mexican, I guess--I don't know.
