

RELATIVES USUALLY VOTE THE SAME WAY

(Whenever anything like that comes up--have you ever heard of a case--like within a family--where a father and his son would disagree? For example, an older person that's not educated and wants to go the old way, and he's got a son that's got an education and he wants to vote a different way--do they ever disagree like that, a father and son?)

No. Usually the boy wins. Works on his father. That's why we got beat. See, I was voted no (?). Some of these older men voting, they're the ones that just found afterwards--after the damage was done.

(You mean the fathers would vote the way their sons wanted them to?)

Yeah, the same way their sons wanted them to. And they found out too late afterwards.

(Have you ever heard of brothers disagreeing with each other and maybe one being on one side and one on the other side?)

Yes. My sons are like that today. Yes.

(Is that very common?)

I don't know about others. Now like--I hate to name you this family. They just don't care. Just so they're existing. And they're the ones that you have to take things to them. They're not going to come and express their ideas and their minds. They're just going to sit back. There's too many like that. That's the way it is today. Now, if we just all work together and pull together like the colored people, we'd get somewhere. Just like our hospital; the way its going on today, see there's all these employees at the hospital that have been mistreated. They just suffer day after day by the head nurse, Miss Boswick. Today. And
