

was captured. Mokin, well, and myself.

(Would you say this man's name again?)

Yeah, Mokin, Mokin. The way the government spell it--Maukeen.

And he got Alvin Rucker and Joseph Thoburn. Don't forget them.

(No, I've got that name. Now, this Mokin, did you say he was the one that owned the Sun Shield?)

He's the--he don't own it. Sun God keeper, Ansokaptah, he's the one, the keeper. But Mokin is the vice-chairman--speaker, caretaker. He performs for the Taimé keeper. Just like a vice-president act for the president. That's Mokin. And he's the--in the Sun Dance, they call him Tsaigaadlkih.

(What?)

Tsaigaadlkih. Tsaigaadlkih. That "Kih" means man. In other words, ceremonial man.

(And how do you say man?)

Tsaigaadl - ceremony; kih. Tsaigaadlkih - ceremonial man. Well, let's see. Who else did we get? That's all, that's all of us, I think. That's all of us, I remember. We went over there one day. Pick up all these men and we went over there. Covered the entire ground. Now, Steven Kotay was married into the man that--the Indian that lived at the foot of that mountain where Cut-throat Massacre is. And he lived there all his life, before the country opened. And they know that history and all where the graves was. And went together here. Course they all dead now. I'm the only one living. Joseph Thoburn's dead. Alvin Rucker is dead. But you might get into his files and get it.

(Yeah, okay.)

The reason--this was the first thing they got and the next event
