

(I met him a long time ago.)

Well, he could tell you all that about them fellows over there.

(Where does he live now?)

He lives right up here.

(Right here at...)

Yeah, you go right down this--he lives (not clear) Tell you what people done, and taking us there right now and they've waited till it's just too late. They ought to dig up all this stuff way back--that old news and make history there. And they want to compare times.

(Yeah.)

Now and sixty years ago. They're thinking about wanting to discard our times now and get back into their older days, and they thought it was better days.

(They were better days!)

Well, they want to bring it back there.

(They can't do it though. They don't know how.)

I know they don't know how. But anyhow, they're a working on that.

Some students. And they catch me in a mood when I didn't want to talk.

And you know, it takes an old person--it takes a fairly old person to come to an old person and dig anything out of him. Because an old person don't, they think it's all--trying to tell a youngster anything. And, so, you think they're just coming there for--oh, I don't know. You take an old person, sorta interested, he can dig out things thatway. Yeah.

That there woman told me, said, "If you'll only tell me three things that I'm wanting to know, that there will be just the biggest help in the world." I forgot now what it was. (interruption)

(Big Cabin's an old town, isn't it?)

Yeah, it's an old town. Well, (interruption) you are going 70 years
