

interesting to the Cherokee people.

(It certainly is.)

And it's a shame that it wasn't (not clear).

(Well. That was Zeke Proctor?)

Zeke Proctor. He killed 12 people, they tell me. But now he was loved by people. They figured he was justified in killing person that he killed. Now here's the other frame. (Mrs. Ronson is apparently showing picturing of people, etc. in early history)

Mr. Ronson: That road used to come right along here (interruption)

Yeah. Right over by the barn and up to the corner.

(Well, this is a beautiful spring.)

Yeah.

Mr. Ronson: They'll dam this up and get water here for that (interruption)

Yeah.

Mr. Ronson: It's got a lot of water. You can see it going down.

There's a tremendous amount of water.

(--and watercress, haven't you?)

Yeah. He was killed here. They said over here, an old oak tree--now

I figured it was it was where they found one of the people--by the oak tree--they said a oak tree didn't they say. But I figured that was it.

They was five people killed here one night.

(Well.)

Mr. Ronson. Two of them is buried over yonder in that cemetery and both of them in the same graves.

You know I didn't know till here just--well, it was not long ago. I was talking to Mrs. Hill up at the store and we was talking about it.

And she said, you know, where those two is buried. Well, I said on my sister's place. And I said I didn't know it. She said, "Yes, in a sunk
