

I'd like to tell a few things about their lives and about how much joy and comfort they have been to me. They are artists, all five of them, they're artist in a different way. Each one of them has his, their own way of art and they are good artists. They are talented in a lot of ways. One of the things about my children is that they use their talent. They draw pictures, they paint pictures and they use their talents in things that are constructive. I enjoy them very much, I always have. When they went to school at Indian Camp, there were two teachers there then. Harold and I both attended Indian Camp School when we were young. These two teachers names are Miss Fred Leonard, Mrs. Fred Leonard and Mrs. Ethel Newberry. They taught, Mrs. Newberry taught there for quite a number of years. She retired not too long ago. Mrs. Leonard is still teaching. I thank these two ladies for bringing out the talent in my children. They knew, they saw early that my children had talent of different kinds and they worked on these talents to develop them to where that they would be useful to them. When they graduated out of the eighth grade they went in to high school and there my boys played football and they weren't outstanding players, but they were good players. They enjoyed the game. They enjoyed playing football, they liked to play. A lot of times they wouldn't win and a few times they got hurt, but never-the-less they liked to play football and tennis and basket ball and I enjoyed watching 'em. I always felt like this was a clean sport and it was good for them. It would help 'em later on in their lives. It would teach them something that I couldn't teach them, I couldn't help them with. There was another teacher in school, her name was Mrs. Blaine Sandlin, in high school. My daughter learned many things from this teacher. She learned some of the things that she uses in her every day life. She learned to sew, she is a good seamstress. She learned to cook. One of the things that she learned from Mrs. Sandlin was
