

No. He Saynday was sitting on a log, he was sitting there and, he uh, a white man come along. He uh, I guess he's, I guess you'd say he's a magician of some type, he's pretty clever, and uh, he's heard about this Indian Saynday, how clever he was. He rode up on a nice looking horse. He had good clothes on. He saw Saynday sitting there and he recognized who he was and he was supposed to be quite a character. He was a notorious liar and magician and what not I guess. This white man he's uh, bout same as Saynday he's a magician. He says, "Saynday they tell me you're, you can fool anybody," he say, "Cause I'm a whiteman, and I don't think you can fool me." Saynday says, "Well, I don't believe I can either, but you see, course--" course in those days I guess they've got certain things they carry around in a sack that's supposed to be pretty potent medicine, such as, maybe rabbit foot or something. He told this white man, he says, "I don't have my medicine with me. It's in a bag and you see that mountain down there?" And you could see a mountain on the horizon, he said, "That's where my medicine is, but it's so far, I just can't go there in a few hours, but if you want to help me, I could go get my medicine. I could probably prove to you if--" and he said, "All right." He says, "I'm agreeable to that. I just want to see if you fool me," and Saynday says, "Well, in order to get back in a little while, I'll have to borrow your horse." Well this white man agreed, well, maybe he does need the horse, so he agreed to loan the horse to Saynday. Saynday said, uh, he got off and Saynday got on this good looking horse and started off. And he was pulling on the reins and the horse would rear up and come back. Saynday said, "Well", he said, "This horse won't go", he said. "He knows I'm a different person", he said. "Maybe if I could borrow some of your clothes, or all your clothes, maybe this horse will think I'm you and he'll go readily." Of course the white man agree, he wanted Saynday to get his medicine so he could fool him. He took off his clothes and gave them to Saynday and Saynday put them on, of course, he wasn't pulling the reins this time, when he got back on the horse and the horse was ready to go. He galloped off a little ways he stopped and looked back and says, "White man, I fooled you that time didn't I", he run off with his horse and all his clothes and the white man was really mad at him. (These are the stories that your grandparents told you as you were growing up, right?)
