

of 'em, they got on down in to Mississippi and on like you say, Alabama, down in that way. Well then, the Creeks and the Choctaws started having it, because the Creeks claimed Alabama Territory and Georgia as their own, and then the Choctaws thought they could stay in the way y'know, but they put an end to that pretty quick. And now the Creeks--oh, do you know that one time they were having a big law suit with millions of dollars involved and the officials in Washington told 'em that they didn't have any law suit because they didn't have any business in this country anyway. That they-- so somebody finally decided to ask one question, "Where do we belong, if we don't belong here?" "You belong in Old Mexico", he said. Well, he was right in a way, because the Creeks come from the Yuchis originally. Now that was a blond tribe. That's what they call the blond tribe, were the Yuchis. They were the ones that knew where the gold was. So then when they had the trouble with the Spainards, the Spainards had one question-- "Where is the gold?" See the men when they met them, had bands of gold molded on their legs and their arms. Just pure bands of gold and feathers. Just regular full capes of feathers. Don't you know they must have been a gorgeous sight? And now this is the peculiar part. When they saw these people land--it was on the Florida coast. And he said there were five chiefs, they were there together then, for some reason they had all collected there and it said that something unusual was going to happen, well, that 's what happened. These people landed and when they did, they said, "Don't shoot, don't shoot, don't kill them." And he says "Why not", they have a strange color," and he says "But they are a lot like we are." They kissed the ground you know when they landed. They were so grateful to land on something firm. And he says, "They are men of God like we are, let them go. They can't hurt us. Let them go." Now that is the story that has been handed down to me and I believe it from the other things that happened. When they said they changed their minds, got more interested in the gold than they did in