

(What was her name?)

Kawko.

(What's that mean?)

Kawko. She remarried again. And married Awkmah (?) later.

(I've heard it said that the original Kickingbird had two brothers. Were those brothers or cousins or do you recall hearing?)

Well, they're really cousins, they're not really brothers I don't think. But the Indian way they call them brothers. Other brother he had was--oh--

(Was that a cousin or brother?)

Brother. Zai Baydil (?).

(Mrs. Curley: Is that his cousin or brother?)

Yeah, his brother. He call him brother but it's his cousin I think. He was a war chief.

(Was he--was Zai Baydil (?) a pretty good warrior?)

Yeah, I know him. He's an old man. I know him.

(Was he the one that had the one eye? Look like a pirate?)

Yeah. The one eye. He was shot. Yeah, shot in the eye. His daughter married my uncle, my father's brother, A-on Tay. And the first boy that was born they call him Iowdon eye shot. "Eye Shot" because he was shot in the eye. After the country open, the white people commence to dig wells. They was digging a well for them over there, bored well. And I done been to school and I was over there when the driller was drilling the well. Just the time they hit water, and they want a sample whether it's good water or not. And they let that fishing line in a little cup and they draw it up and the old lady (not clear) wife was standing there, and I was standing there and they drawed it up and this time they drawed it up and start to put it in his mouth the old lady grabbed it away from him. "Oh no," she says. "You wait." He says, "I'm going to talk to the Lord and my God give me water. Then you can drink." And she wasn't a Christian but she had faith in Creation that God
